What is a cookie?

A cookie is a data file that a website stores on your IT equipment, such as computer, tablet and smartphone. The purpose is to recognize the IT equipment and thereby observe how you use the website.

Today, virtually all websites use cookies. In many cases, cookies are required to provide proper service on the website.

A cookie is a passive file that cannot collect the information that is on your computer or spread computer viruses and other malicious programs.

Some cookies are only stored on your IT equipment as long as you have your browser open, so-called session cookies. Other cookies are stored on your IT equipment for a longer period of time, so-called persistent cookies. When you return to a website, the cookie is typically renewed automatically.

Often, cookies are stored from other parties than the one who owns the website (third-party cookies). It can be cookies with ordinary content but also analysis tools and embedded comment fields.

How long will cookies be stored?

A cookie's life may vary depending on your preference and needs. Some disappear when you close your browser, while others can exist for years. It depends on the specific website.

Typical cookies "live" for up to two years, but are usually extended after each visit to the website. If you revisit a website after six months, the cookie's lifetime will be prolonged by two years from the date of your visit.

At any time you can delete cookies from your computer. See more about this at <http://allaboutcookies.org>

Changes to the cookie policy

We reserve the right to continuously update this cookies policy and encourage you to read the policy from time to time to keep you informed about how we use cookies. This cookie policy was last updated in February 2019.
